January 19, 2024

NEW ORLEANS — A Houston woman and former Amtrak employee was sentenced Wednesday to five years' probation and was ordered to pay $55,141 in restitution and a $100 mandatory special assessment fee for making false statements related to the Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security Act.

According to a press release from the U.S. Attorney's Office, Eastern District of Louisiana, Bria Peters made false statements to obtain a Paycheck Protection Program loan. Peters claimed she owned a clothing business impacted by the pandemic when, in truth, she had no such business. Peters later received a PPP loan of more than $29,000.

The Amtrak Office of Inspector General and Railroad Retirement Board OIG investigated the case.
